clared repeatedly during his last sickness that she would not visit him at the hotel. She believed that the appeals for her to come to him were merely tricks to get her out of the house. Worse than this, she knew, with woman's intuition. home, if once he succeeded in his plans for divorce. She knew that her own mariage to Mr. Yerkes followed on the heels of the divorce obtained by his first

When Mr. Yerkes returned from Europe last August, with Miss Grigsby, he announced his intention to divorce Mrs. Yerkes. From that time until two weeks ago she was obliged to stay behind locked doors. Many times she had been asked by telephone to come to the Waldorf. On Sunday she finally consented. It is said that she learned Miss Grigsby was calling on the sick man and that she then refused to see Yesterday she once more left her handsome jall and when she returned the man whose legal machinations she feared was dead.
